Dear Reperio,

I am applying for the Independent ERP / Odoo Consultant role with the New Jersey snack food manufacturer (reference 246204).

The requirement that caught my attention is the one most candidates will skip past: the confidence to give an independent view rather than simply validate the vendor. That is the whole of what I do. I spent thirty years running plants before I ever configured an ERP, so when a routing says eight minutes and the floor says fourteen, I know which number to believe and I know what to do about it.

My regulated food and beverage experience is at Treasury Wine Estates, where I was Lean Manager for bottling and later responsible for capital projects installing new bottling lines. Lot traceability, shelf life, and recall exposure were operating realities there rather than configuration settings, and I learned what a routing looks like on the day the equipment is commissioned and nothing matches the drawing.

I have since configured Odoo for manufacturing, and I have built and deployed my own production tracking platform on client-owned hardware, which means I have sat on both sides of the line between the ERP and the shop floor.

I am an Ohio-based LLC, available for a fractional engagement at ten hours a week, and able to travel to New Jersey in the first two weeks. Rate expectation is in the $90 to $100 band.

A one-page summary of how I approach Odoo in a manufacturing environment is attached, along with my CV.
